SOUL, CONFESSING SHE HIRED MURDER

Georgians Are Stirred by Her Tale of Grim Death, and Insanity Is Claimed.

MACON, Ga., Dec. 28.—Relatives and friends of Mrs. James King. widow of one of the wealthiest farmers in this section of the State, were taking steps today to have Mrs. King declared insane in order that she may escape the gallows, following her confession that she forced Nicholas confession that she forced Nicholas a story concerning an alleged mar-Wilburn, a young farmer, to kill her riage of King George of England in husband.

Wilburn confessed the crime, and insisted that it was instigated by Mrs. King, who had promised to pay Mrs. King, who had promised to pay him $2,000, the proceeds of an insurance policy on King's life, and also to marry him. Mrs. King at first denied the crime, but under crossexamination by the sheriff and district attorney at last admitted her guilt.

Pleads for Mercy.

It deportation from this country, according to the Special Inquiry Board's first ruling, on the ground that he was for repeating the story of the Arise Liberator repeating the story of the alleged marriage of King George to a daughter of Admiral Sir Michael Culmers, and had been current in England and had been printed in this country. On the ve of Mylius' trial the charge was changed to one of defamatory libel, on which he was convicted and sentenced.

Her confession followed a sensational scene in the juil office. Pressed to ad-mit the truth of the Wilburn charge she cried again and again that, "as Gpd was her judge," she was innocent. Finally she threw her hands in the air and falling prone on the floor sobbed and failing prone on the floor sobbed bitterly:

"Yes, yes, yes! I did it, I did it; do you think God will forgive me? Ask the people to have mercy on me, not for myself but for my children."

Later when partially calmed Mrs. Ling made a complete confession which was reduced to writing and sworn to.

"Last March," she said, "Nick Wilburn and myself were sitting in my dining room. Nick told me that he did not have a friend in the world. I patted him on the back and told him that I would be his friend.

"Had it not been for the $2,000 insurance we would never have plotted to kill my husband. My first attempt was with strychnine. Nick bought the polson and we put it in my husband's whisky. When he became sick he took an emetic and recovered.

'Then we plotted to shoot him. Nick told me that he would catch him out hunting and kill him with his own gun. The day of the killing Nick came in after Mr. King had been gone for about, an hour, I told him my husband had gone and that now was our time.

'He left and soon afterward he came back and told me that James was dead. I sent Johnny Gordon and Frank Wilburn to find my husband. They came back and said that he had accidentally killed himself.

'This was on December 13 when they sack and said that he had accidentally killed hishself.

"This was on December 13 when they found the body, but it was the day before that he was killed. On December 17 Detective Moore came around and then Nick told me that he was suspected of having done the killing. I told him to brace up. I didn't believe he would give me away, and after he did I was determined to deny it all and go to the gallows if I had to with a lie on my lips. But now I have decided to tell the truth, as I could not meet my God with such a lie."

Mother of Six.

Mrs. King is thirty-five years old and he mother of six children and had been a leader in church affairs in Jones county. Wilburn was ten years her junior. Because of threats of lynching made by friends of King a guard has been placed about the jail here. The feeling is intense against both the man and widow, although the members of the woman's family, which is one of the most prominent in this section of Georgia, is standing by her on the ground that since the birth of her last baby she has been irrational and they declare that Wilburn worked on her weakened mentality.

WIDOW BARES HER NAGEL MAY DECIDE FULL COMMITTEE LIBEL OF GEORGE V

Fate of English Journalist Who Published "Marriage" Story May Rest With Secretary-Mylius Is Fighting Deportation.

If libeling a king in a political paper involves moral turpitude, Secretary Nagel, of the Department of Commerce and Laber, will be called upon to deport Edouard F. Mylius, the English journalist, ordered sent back York last Sunday. A report on the rehearing of the case being held this afternoon before the Special Inquiry Board at Ellis Island will be in the hands of the Secretary Monday, and if the board does not find for Mylius, then the Secretary will be asked to decide whether Mylius' circulation of

Went To English Prison.

Mylius served a one-year sentence to deportation from this country, ac-the charge was changed to one of defamatory libel, on which he was convicted and sentenced.

The delicate point in the entire situation which may have to be decided by Becretary Nagel is: "Was Mylius' article merely a political attack on monarchical institutions in an effort to further the cause of republics or did his act constitute a crime involving moral turpitude."

While the Becretary has not considered the subject yet, there is a division of opinion among his assistants. Bome hold that the story against the King was malicious and did involve moral turpitude, therefore rendering Mylius' conviction a subject for application of the deportation laws. Others say that the affair is merely political that Mylius, under proper conditions, of free speech, would have been able to print the story, and further would not be charged with any moral laxity. It is pointed out that Mylius was of republican tendencies and that he acted only from a sense duty. Old Statutes Used.

In Mylius' trial in England the usual procedure was not followed. Ordinarily the offended party has to appear personally and deny the charges, but King George did not enter a denial until after sentence had been imposed. The government showed, it is claimed, that it considered the crime as political and an attack upon the monarchy, and it resorted to two old statutes, used only twice previously and bearing solely on sedition, in convicting Mylius.

Upon his arrival here, Mylius was ordered deported but his appeal to Secretary Nagel acted as a stay and obtained for him a rehearing. If this falls to grant him entrance to this country, he will ask Secretary Nagel to act in his behalf.

The Political Refugees' League and the Prec Speech League have taken up the fight, and will exert every influence to have the secretary coincide with their belief that Mylius acted only from righteous and just motives in his article on the King.

Mylius, in discussing the case, says: "I want to emphasize the fact that the story of King George's marriage had been published in England Itself long before it was printed in the Liberator. Modern Society, a weekly journal, printed it. So did the chain of journals known as Raynolds' newspapers. There is no doubt of the truth of the story.

(Continued from First Page.) try. I think you are the best and the worst Engineer Commissioner we ever had." Everybody laughed.
Mr. Stellwagen later objected to the statement by Attorney Douglas that Commissioner Judson was used by the bank president as a "go between" to arrange for a meeting between Mr. Stellwagen and Congressman Burieson.

Holds Valuation Excessive. Mr. Stellwagen was quised at lengt regarding his reasons for suggesting to regarding his reasons for suggesting to the Commissioners that an investigation of the office of the superintendent of insurance and the First National and Commercial companies should be had. He said he didn't believe the Commis-sioners had seen the Ingham report, boosting the appraisement on the Bouthern building, "until I called atten-tion to it."

Bouthern building, "until I called attention to it."

Mr. Stellwagen said he regarded the $2,00,000 valuation on the Southern building, carried in the insurance superintendent's report, was "highly excessive and worthy of nestigation."

During the testimony of Commissioner Rudolph, Congressman Redfield commented upon the fact that the insurance superintendent's office and was without comment on the part of Mr. Ingham himself. The Congressman obtained an admission from the Commission that Mr. Ingham had been "neglectful" in this respect.

Congressman George, whose chief interest is in real estate, asked Mr. Stellwagen if he knew of a "real estate ring."

"I have never heard of one until it was mentioned here in the committee," said Mr. Stellwagen.
"Did it ever occur to you that you might be one of those referred to as a member of the real estate ring."

No "Real Estate Ring." "I know of no such ring," said Mr. Stellwagen. "When I read the testi-mony of the hearing. I rather got the mony of the hearing. I rather got the idea that some one was hitting at me."
Mr. George then quissed Mr. Steil-wagen at length regarding his real estate holdings, and his interest in the Thomas J. Fisher Company. He was asked the value of the ground upon which the Union Trust building stands. Mr. Steilwagen said it probably was now $32 a foot, although it had been purchased five years ago at $35, and was assessed at $34.

"How much is it underassessed now," asked Mr. George.

"Oh, perhaps, $2 a foot," was the reply.

Felt Action Public Duty. Mr. Douglas, who began the cross examination of Mr. Stellwagen, referred sarcastically to "your excitement when you saw the report of the superintending valuation."

Mr. Stellwagen denied that he became excited, and insisted that he called the attention of the Commissioners to the report merely as a matter of public duty, and not because of selfah interests as a property-holder in that vicinity.

Reverting to the inaugural chairmanship row, Mr. Easby-Smith asked Mr. Stellwagen if he had corrected his statement to Mr. Burkson when he learned that Mr. Jordan had severed his connection in July with the First National Fire Insurance Company.

"I don't need to make the correction. Mr. Burkson told me so himself." said Mr. Stellwagen, who again denied that he had attempted to stir up the insurance controversy to injure the candidacies of Mr. Harper and Mr. Jordan. The two questions were only incidentally related, he said. ing valuation."
